Study Name: Can children tell apart reliable from unreliable news articles online?

Your child’s data

Why we collect your child's personal data
We collect your child’s personal data under the terms of the University’s Royal Charter in our capacity as a teaching and research body to advance education and learning. Specific purposes for data collection on this occasion are to carry out research to better understand child development in the primary school years.

Legal basis for processing your child's personal data under GDPR
The legal basis for processing your child’s personal data on this occasion is Article 6(1e) - processing is necessary for the performance of a task carried out in the public interest.

How long we keep your child’s data
The University may store your child’s data for up to 25 years and for a period of no less than 7 years after the research project finishes. The researchers who gathered or processed the data may also store the data indefinitely and reuse it in future research. To safeguard the data stored about your child their name will be removed and a unique code will be used so that they cannot be recognised from it. Any identifying information about your child will be stored separately in a secure and locked filing cabinet or archive, or in a password protected electronic database at the University of Nottingham.

Who we share your child’s data with
Extracts of your child’s anonymised data may be disclosed in published works that are posted online for use by the scientific community. Your child’s anonymised data may also be stored indefinitely on external data repositories (e.g., the UK Data Archive) and be further processed for archiving purposes in the public interest, or for historical, scientific or statistical purposes. Your child’s data may also move with the researcher who collected it to another institution in the future.

Further information
For further information about the University’s obligations with respect to yours and your child’s data, who you can get in touch with, and your rights as a data subject, please visit: https://www.nottingham.ac.uk/utilities/privacy.aspx